Bates Clark Medal Winner and Leading Academic Experts Affiliate with Analysis Group

Boston, January 31, 2008 — Analysis Group, Inc., a leading provider of economic, finance, and strategy expertise, is pleased to announce the addition of six new expert affiliates, effective immediately. “We are delighted to welcome a truly exceptional new group of experts to our affiliate network. With specialized industry knowledge and outstanding professional reputations, each brings tremendous new value to our firm and to our clients,” said President and CEO Martha Samuelson.

Analysis Group’s newly affiliated experts include:

Susan C. Athey of Harvard University is winner of the American Economic Association’s 2007 John Bates Clark Medal, awarded every other year to the most accomplished American economist under the age of 40. Professor Athey is an expert in a broad range of economic fields – including industrial organization, econometrics, microeconomic theory, and auctions – and has used game theory to examine firm strategy when firms have private information.

A specialist in the analysis of complex litigation issues involving securities, banks, and thrifts, Charlotte Chamberlain is a former managing director in equity research at Jeffries & Company.

Michelle P. Connolly of Duke University was formerly Chief Economist at the Federal Communications Commission, and is an authority on telecommunications and intellectual property.

An expert on transfer pricing and the political economy of multinational enterprises, Lorraine A. Eden of Texas A&M University has more than 20 years of public and private sector consulting experience.

Oliver Hart of Harvard University is a leading expert in contract theory, the theory of the firm, corporate finance and corporate governance.

Andrew Metrick of Yale University conducts research on venture capital, private equity, corporate governance, and decision-making under uncertainty, and is an expert on the investment management industry.
