Analysis Group Ranked Fourth in Vault's 50 Best Consulting Firms to Work For

Boston, August 30, 2010 — “Collaborative meritocracy,” “integrity of the partnership,” and “strong camaraderie amongst analysts” are factors that distinguish Analysis Group, a leading provider of economic, financial, and business expertise, according to a recent Vault survey. The firm is pleased to announce that it was ranked fourth in The Vault Consulting 50, a new ranking of the nation’s top consulting firms to work for, alongside large consulting firms Bain, Boston Consulting Group, and McKinsey. Analysis Group also ranked first among firms with fewer than 4,500 employees. The firm’s sterling reputation, impressive assignments, and quality of life catapulted it to the top tier of the Vault rankings.

The Vault survey highlighted the firm’s high quality of life scores, with its consultants noting a “good working environment” that encouraged “lots of mentoring” between senior staff and junior consultants and researchers. The high degree of professionalism and “close-knit and sociable” relationships at Analysis Group were key factors in the firm’s impressive ranking as a great place to work. Analysis Group’s Vault survey results are available online.

“We’re honored to be included on this list and ranked as one of the four top consulting firms to work for,” said Analysis Group President and CEO Martha Samuelson. “Our firm takes pride in our strong and collaborative culture, which encourages teamwork, personal responsibility, and a commitment to excellence.”

The rankings were determined from responses to Vault’s annual Management and Strategy Consulting Survey. Conducted from March through July, over 4,500 consultants were asked to assess their peer consulting firms’ prestige and their own firm’s quality of life. A weighted formula was applied to the data to determine the inaugural Vault Consulting 50 rankings. The full list is available online.

In describing the rankings, Brian Dalton, managing editor at Vault.com, noted, “According to consultants, company culture was the most important factor, followed by practice strength, prestige, and compensation, along with several other factors.”
